JUST LIKE LONDON, YOU KNOW. Crossings Sweepers Take Possession of Corners and Reap a Harvest.

Pedestrians at Clark and Van Buren streets were surprised early this morning to see a man industriously sweeping the crossings. Every few minutes he would pause in his work and pass around his hat. Sometimes he received a nickel and sometimes more. Then he would resume his work of keeping the snow and slush out of the way of the crowd. Two or three hungry-looking men stopped and watched the work of the crossing sweeper. In two minutes the hungry watchers had assumed the proportions of a crowd. When he stopped and gathered in the nickels the hungry eyes looked envious. "Say, Chimmy," said one of the onlookers to a slouchily-dressed companion as a dime dropped into the hat of the crossing sweeper, "dat's great graft, ain't it?" "Betcherlife. Say, why can't we do de same ting? "Why, o' couse we kin. Let's go to der hotel and borry a couple o' brooms. Ten minutes later the two men emerged from a South Clark-street lodging house each armed with a broom. They made a beeline for Van Buren and State streets, and

About the same time various other crossings were taken possession of by volunteer sweepers with brooms, and the hats circulated into the crowds with success. An Englishman who was passing one of these industrious parties, raised his monocle to his eye and ejaculated, with a pleased smile on his face:

"Why, bless me h'eyes, if it h'aint like bein' in Lunnon, dontcherknow. Regular Lunnon crossing sweeps, egad." The man who started the street crossing boon, however, said he was from New York and imported the custom from the Eastern metropolis. In any event the crossing sweeper has arrived, and while pedestrians will fortunate will find in the new occupation

the means of securing a square meal. One Boy's Idea.
